The News runs a briel review of the different candidates for office, this week. In this review, no weight whatever is given to political affiliations, and in fact no consideration influenced the writer save the honest desire to secure the best men for all the offices. It would be only natural if the partisans of either party find fault with some names suggested, and some may go to the length of voting for their party mon without respect to their Kalaupapa, Kalawac and Waikolu qualifications on the principle that one should vote for a yaller dog. if on his ticket. But is up to the conservative and thinking voters of Maui to carefully study both tickets, and then unite in voting for the best men, because once elected, it is not the fact that they are republicans or home rulers, but rather their ability to fill the offices to which they are elected that will chiefly interest the penple of Maui.

Some time since, the NEWS suggested that a $10,000 stock company in Honolulu organized for the purpose of handling Island vegetables and produce alone, would not only drive out California vegetables, but would also largely promote vegetable culture on the Islands. A small beginning in this direction has been inaugurateti by Byron O. Clark of Wahiawa colony on Oahu, who has established a small business in Honolulu for the purpose of handling island produce from all the Islands. If the business is developed to its full possibilities there is every reason to believe that the island steamers will grant such concessions as will permit the shipment to Honolulu from all the Islands in cold storage, of large amounts of small fruits, berries, and tender vegetables. Some years since the Kinau put in a cold storage room for this purpose, but had to take it out for lack of patronage. Try it ag in, Kinau.

Since the last issue of this paper, news has been received of the passing away of two of the most noted men of Honolulu, Judge Morris M. Estee and Hon. Robert Wilcox. The mention of these two names is one breath carries a profound object lesson with it, to thoughtful meu. Judge Estee's life on the Islands was like the light of a rising and revivifying sun, bearing in its rays and warmth the new light of all that was broadest and noblest and best in American manhood, and his influence will long survive his personal remembrance, for what he has done in leading the people of the Islands toward the true ideals of American citizenship. With the passing away of Robert Wilcox, there will be buried the last remnants of days and times and ambitions that belonged to the old order of things on the Islands, because, while we may have other Estees, we can never again have another Robert Wilcox.

Lahaina has lost one of its most attractive features in the colony of Gilbert Islanders who have left for their old home. These Islanders were in the main a sober and industrious people whose skill in hat making, and mat work was much in demand to supply the trade which they had built up, and at which they prospered for many years. It is a serious question as to whether or not it was wise to induce these people to break up their happy homes and successful business at Lahaina, merely to seek the home of their childhood where they will now feel more like strangers.

The Hawaiian Star strenuously opposes the idea of allowing the use of the capitol building and a state funeral for the late Robert Wilcox, and offers strong and excellent reason to sustain its position. After all however, it is a matter of sentiment rather than of reason, and if it will be any satisfaction to the devoted followers of their lost leader, they should be permitted the use of the throne room and all the paraphernalia available for the purposes of a state funeral. It would be a petty act to deny them this much.

The fact that a sure lantana destroyer, a "dark-colored fly, about the size of an ordinary house fly, but less gauzy and infinitely more business like in appearance," has been introduced on the islands, and will in the next few years entirely destroy the generative power of the lantana is very encouraging not only so far as the destruction of lantana is concerned, but also as an object lesson in what intelligent efforts can accomplish in the matter of combating other pests on the Islands.

Before the next copy of the News is issued the people of Maui will have selected the men who are to conduct county affairs for the ensuing year. True, it will be for one year only but everything will be new and strange, and many knotty problems will arise. For this reason, all prejudice should be laid aside, and the very best men should be selected. Voters, think about this, before you mark your ballots.

The tourist travel proposition is now being handled intel ligently, and there is no doubt but that hundreds of tourists will visit the Islands this winter, and thousands will follow next year, if the pioneer arrivals report favorably of their visit. No pains should be spared to help the first arrivals to have a royal good time.

D. D. Baldwin and W. E. Beckwith; both of Maul have taken the lead in the matter of establishing successful pineapple culture, and next year a cannery is to be erected. An extensive guava jelly plant is also well under way. One by one, the industries FULLY GUARANTEED. predicted by the News are materializing
